

How the COVID-19 pandemic has impacted my college and career aspirations."

COVID-19 Has led to a huge transition in my life by giving me a view of how serious I should be taking my future. COVID-19 has changed my mentality and has pushed me to an extent to overachieve, stay prepared, and time manage. During the time of 2021 in the 10th grade, there was a huge lockdown that occurred for the entire year due to COVID. This gave me some time to think about what career choice I would appoint in my life. A time to settle down and reevaluate myself.

With a touch of mental healing and stability, I was able to gain motivation from this point. I understood that I needed to get up and do something. I had realized that I didn't truly know what field I wanted to go into or what pathway I wanted to pursue with my passion. So every two or three days I will decide to look up the requirements that I would need for my college and my career. I ended up figuring out about FASFA and other requirements that I needed. I found out that there were multiple business fields within business management such as accounting, financing, and even entrepreneurship.

At that point, I realized that I was already behind and that I had already missed out on the opportunity. So by then, I started to arrange things together. COVID-19 lockdown last year until now has given me enough time to think and plan precisely what I wanted to do with my future. Motivating me to capitalize off of all and any opportunity I get. While evolving me and overall changing my mentality about my life.
