

How has the covid 19 pandemic impacted my college and career aspirations? Well to start, I feel that the pandemic has made a lot of students languorous. Languorous especially being that school last year in APS was virtual. Many students, in their at home environment, were not used to having any work to do other than homework. For some this might have been a benefit, but for others that may have not adjusted, this could have been a negative.

It's safe to say that students have felt the effect of the pandemic in a way. Whether they became lazy at home, or possibly got covid 19. Many had debates on if people should stay at home until everyone is vaccinated. People also had their differences on if the vaccine is safe. Although the school has opened back up and mask mandates have been dropped many wonder if that was the appropriate decision. Covid is responsible for killing 7.7 million people across every state in the United states.

While many people tested positive, some might have not felt the effects of covid. This caused them to not feel required to take precautions with the mask mandates. Meaning while they were not feeling the effects they may have spread it to a family member or a peer who may be one who feels the effects. I've had covid and it's nothing to joke about. I feel that masks shouldn't be mandated but for people to take the pandemic seriously. Which is why I feel the government should establish programs to encourage positive health practices among people to reduce contamination.
