Explain how the desire to be a social media influencer may or may not affect a high school student's decision to pursue a college education.

The desire to be a social media influencer affects a high school's student decision to pursue a college education. Nowadays, it seems many entrepreneurs, scholars you see on social media have become successful by being a social media influencer. They have either dropped out of college or never went to college. It is most definitely possible to go the route of becoming a social media influencer. There are also people who have gone to school and have become famous and financially compensated. There are definitely two sides to this.

What people don't see is the number of people who drop out of high school, don't go to college or drop out of college and never make it being an Influencer. We only end up seeing the one percent who does. It's very easy to get caught up in the dream of not going to college, not getting a degree to go to college and being successful. Who doesn't want to blow up overnight and be a sensation? It is easy to become addicted! Research shows that students who spend too much time on social media can suffer from poor sleep habits, eye fatigue, negative body images, depression, anxiety, cyberbullying, and more.

Social Media is one the worst, but one of the best inventions ever. It all depends on how the user chooses to be affected by it and use it. Everything we see really affects decisions for college whether we realize it or not. Social media just allows us to broaden that scale.
